Global Survey Report on the Future of Research Education in Universities

Enago, a global leader in editing and publication support services, recently conducted a comprehensive global survey on the Future of Research Education in the backdrop of COVID-19. This broad survey, which represents millions of students and thousands of faculty members, was conducted over 8 weeks between May and June 2020. A total of 108 universities spread across 38 countries.

The key learning from this survey is that a significant “paradigm shift” has occurred during the first half of 2020. A switch to online classrooms and e-learning systems is widespread, adverse impact on research budgets is evident, overall uncertainty has risen, and a segment of universities has not found it easy to transition. However, the visible silver lining of the unprecedented global events is that the broad changes are likely to result in a more dynamic and progressive future of research education in universities in the medium to long term.

WHAT OUR CLIENTS HAVE TO SAY

"I do appreciate the professional service that I did not expect myself to use this before. The suggestion, the explanation and the tips for each spot were really helpful and allow me to learn a lot from the native speaker"

"I think the quality of this proofreading is poor. In a similar context, you changed the meaning of "different, various" to different-->various, but in another place you changed it to various-->different, and the standard is not clear. There were other places where the order of the words was swapped and as a result, the sentence was out of order."

"It felt like it was proofread by someone who had never done chemistry before. I felt that you did not understand the content of the paper and the sentences had different meanings. I would like you to proofread it with more understanding."

"I was really surprised by the thoroughness and quality of the revision of the text. The submitted text had already been proofread by a native speaker. I did not expect such a large amount of editing. The text after your edits is much easier to understand. Really great work."

EDITOR SPEAK

PSE1549, United Kingdom

As an academician, I have gained many years of academic editing experience while pursuing teaching and research in a university. I have worked in several universities in the UK and Asia, and I heard about Enago's services during my work in South Asia. I thoroughly researched about the company and applied to join their editing team so that I could work while I travel.

I find the work to be highly stimulating and varied. I especially focus on editing in the social sciences and some areas of humanities. By working for Enago, I satisfy my desire to continuously learn by reading and editing latest research while being able to offer my English editing skills to support non-native English-speaking academicians publish their valuable research. This is deeply fulfilling for me. I feel proud to work for an organization that is working to actively help non-native English-speaking academicians contribute to international scientific research literature. This thought keeps me going when I am dealing with editing challenges and motivates me to do my best for the academicians concerned.
