What's New?

Enago acquires US-based RAx Labs Inc. – to provide end-to-end AI solutions for all author and publisher needs

Enago, a global leader in providing research and publication solutions, announced its acquisition of RAx Labs Inc. (www.raxter.io), a US-based company specializing in Artificial Intelligence (AI) and Natural Language Processing (NLP)-based products for literature review, critical reading, concept extraction, semantic knowledge mining, content discovery, and recommendation tools for researchers and publishers. The acquisition will help Enago rapidly scale up its AI business/technological offerings.

EDITOR SPEAK

BH360, United Kingdom

I was initially contacted by a representative from Enago via LinkedIn. Since the time I started working with Enago, I have regularly been receiving assignments. Many of the assignments I receive are related to my field of specialization. On the whole, I find the assignments interesting, as I enjoy reading about current researches.

My queries are generally answered promptly, and I have often used the chat option on Enago's user interface to ask a question. Feedback is provided from time to time on assignments, and I believe that my scientific editing has improved as a result of this. I think it is good that Enago's feedback is a two-way mechanism, with editors being encouraged to respond to comments received from the Quality team. The style guide and other documents are also useful for ensuring that editing conforms to the expected standard.
