What's New?

We collaborated with Nanjing University for an insightful author workshop. Chinese researchers are already making great strides in research across diverse fields and this workshop was an attempt to push them closer to their publication goals in international journals.

This workshop was convened by Professor Zhou Xiaowei, with 5 expert guest speakers diving into the theme of “Innovative Design and Writing of Chinese Scientific and Technical Papers from the Perspectives of Editors and University Teachers.”

The expert speakers included Associate Professor Zhang Shujuan, Professor Xin Fengxue, and Professor Ji Xiaojun from the Nanjing University of Technology, Feng Yuanyuan, Editor-in-Chief of Food Industry Science and Technology, and Chen Liping, editor of Journal of Shandong University (Science Edition).

They successfully enthralled the participants with their thought-provoking presentations on topics related to innovations in writing Scientific and Technical papers from the specific perspective of China.

WHAT OUR CLIENTS HAVE TO SAY

"The Editor who touched up the article was very responsible and introduced his own understanding based on fixing the language errors to make the article more complete."

"The professional knowledge is too poor, and there are problems in many professional terms, which have not been revised."

"They made careful corrections. They also corrected the details of the method (eg., correcting minor settings in PCR). I am very satisfied."

"I submitted a total of two articles, and it is obvious that the editor of this one is not as strong as the editorial touch-ups of previous one, which merely corrected the language errors, plus the submission description letter is very similar to the abstract."

EDITOR SPEAK

MB918, New Zealand

I have now been working as a freelance editor for Enago for a long time—and I'm loving it! As a mother of young children, with a PhD in Zoology, it is difficult to find a work-life balance that suits, but the flexibility of being a freelancer and being able to help other scientists with their research is the perfect solution.

Enago is an extremely professional company with good resources for their editors and well-designed workflow systems. The feedback requirements for their clients are also extremely easy to follow, minimizing the time needed to be spent on them. The staff at Enago is very pleasant to communicate with and always respond promptly to queries. The feedback they provide is greatly appreciated as it is a good opportunity for continuously improving my editing skills.

Shortly after joining the Enago freelancer pool, I was offered a one-year contract, which guarantees a monthly income in return for my guarantee of editing a certain number of words per month.

I am always looking forward to the next assignment and very much hope that I will continue to work for Enago well into the future!
